What is Person Centered Planning?

Person-centered planning (PCP) is centered on the interests, desires, and needs of the person. It focuses on the people and their needs by putting them in charge of defining the direction for their lives, not on the systems that may or may not be available to serve them. PCP focuses on the supports desired by the person and his or her family and loved ones, information supplied by friends, health care providers and other involved service providers. This information is brought together and used in the development of the plan based on the perspective and priorities of the individual. This means that the individual-and the family-direct the planning process, not the system. This ultimately leads to greater inclusion as valued members of both community and society.

Person-centered planning involves the development of a "toolbox" of methods and resources that enable people with disabilities and their families to choose their own pathways to success; the facilitators simply help them to figure out where they want to go and how best to get there.

Planning Models:

There are several types of person centered planning formats available, such as Circle of Friends (MAPS), Planning Alternative Tomorrows with Hope (PATH) and Essential Lifestyle Planning. Each of these models is widely recognized and accepted versions of Person Centered Planning.

Who needs Training?

Every person who works with or provides supports for someone with a disability needs to have firm understanding of the values of person-centered planning. The North Carolina State Plan states that every person working with individuals supporting issues of Mental Illness, Developmental Disabilities, and Substance Abuse receive Person Centered Planning.

However, those people who are responsible for writing person centered plans or those responsible for quality review or outcome measures need a more in depth understanding of the person centered planning process.

How do you register?

O'Berry Center Foundation has partnered with O'Berry Center to hold sessions of Person Centered Thinking Overview Trainings. This training session is appropriate for everyone supporting individuals with Mental Health, Developmental Disabilities, or Substance Abuse concerns. This course will satisfy 6 hours of Person Centered Thinking per the North Carolina Community Supports Definitions. The trainers are certified through the Developmental Disabilities Training Institute (DDTI) and the curriculum is Essential Lifestyle based which is recognized nationally and by the state of North Carolina.

Please complete and detach the registration form to the right to register for training sessions.
